Although passed on the date given above, it was not made public until September 3d, in the same year, when it appeared in the Proster Gazette and Country Journe A. Till flag seems to have been the result of the work commenced by Washington, Dr. Frankin, Mr Lynch, Mr. Harrison, and Colonel Joseph Reed. On the 2d of Janur ry, 1777, Washington was in the American camp at Cambridge, organizing the new army which was the American the new army which was theat day created. The committee of conference, consisting of Franklin, Lynch, and Harrison, sent by Congress to arrange with Washir gton the details of the army, wer's with him. Colonel Reed, one of the nides-de-camp, was also secretary of the Committee of Conferhad long coupled the thoughts of

Reed and his associates. The flag in use by the army was a plain red field, with the British union of the erosses of St. George, St. Andrew, and St. Patrick on the upper left corner. Several gentlemen of Boston sent to the American camp copies of the King's speech. It was received at the date mentioned above, and the effect is described in the British Annual Register, 1776, page 147, thus: -

"The arrival of the copy of the King's speech, with an account of the fate of the petition from the Continental Congress, is said to have excited the greatest degree of rage and indignation among them; as a proof of which, the former was pub-Omp owns the $100,000,000 worth liely burnt in the camp, and they NEARLY $1,200,000 are invested are said, on this occasion, to have changed their colors from a plain red ground, which they had hitherto A Russian farmer of Odessa has used, to a flag of thirteen stripes, as a symbol of the number and union of the colonies."
